Take A Hike

with Cecilie Bodman

Our first hike will take off from the Santa Fe Ski Area and head in the direction of Santa Fe Baldy on December 7, 2013

Santa Fe Baldy, at the southern end of the Sangre de Cristo Range, is the highest point in the cluster of mountains above the city of Santa Fe, New Mexico.

It is situated within the Pecos Wilderness section of the Santa Fe National Forest, a vast, rugged wilderness with boundless opportunities for hiking.

The Baldy trail is 7 miles but we will only hike about 2 miles in so it will be about a four mile hike unless the group wants to hike further along the trail. The trail is very flat and easy and follows along the side of the mountain. We may see some beautiful color, snow and wildlife.

Please RSVP to Cecilie at abqgold@ymail.com or 505-250-1356 if you want to join us. We will meet at the start of the trail at 10am. We can car pool from ABQ (or Santa Fe). We can also meet for breakfast and/or lunch.

The trail head for Baldy is located at the parking lot of the Santa Fe Ski area, about 20 miles or so from the Santa Fe town square. To get here from Santa Fe, take HWY 285 N/St. Francis Dr. toward the center of town. As you near downtown, St. Francis intersects Paseo de Peralta. Don't turn here, but continue on a few blocks until St. Francis intersects Paseo de Peralta a second time (P. Peralta makes a loop). Turn right on Paseo de Peralta and follow it for a couple of blocks. Turn left on Bishop Lodge Road, which is immediately after the large, pink, moorish looking church. Turn right on to Artist Road/Hyde Park Road, which winds its way up the mountain and then takes you to the base of Santa Fe Ski Area. As you enter the parking area for the ski area, stay left where the road forks around a grove of trees. The trailhead is on your left about 100 yards past the fork in the road, near a small grey building housing the restrooms.

So show up & be ready to Take A Hike on Saturday, December 7, at 10am with Cecilie Bodman!

Feng Shui For Real Life

In this column, Feng Shui Expert Carol Olmstead answers your questions.

Q: My son and his wife recently got married and they are moving into their new home next month. I'm thankful for my loving son and his wonderful wife. What kind of gift should I bring to their open house?

A: Congratulations on your son's marriage! I do have a few favorite Feng Shui friendly housewarming gifts for newlyweds, and these also work for anyone moving into a new space or as thank you gifts:

- Plants - Any plant is good as long as it doesn't have thorns. The Lucky Bamboo Plant is popular because people associate it with Feng Shui and good fortune, plus, it's low maintenance because it can be grown in water. Avoid Bonsai because they represent stunted growth.
- Wind Chimes - These "call" the positive chi, or energy, to a location, so giving them as a gift sends the message that the recipient's home will always attract happiness. Choose metal or wood chimes to hang at the front or back of the house.
- Precious Stones - Specific stones are associated with special powers of happiness, wealth, and love. My favorite stone for a house warming is amethyst, the stone of protection that enhances serenity. Other good choices include rose quartz for love, tiger's eye for concentration, and turquoise to dispel negative energy and encourage peacefulness.
- Books. A gift of a book opens up the world for the recipient. It doesn't matter whether it's a printed book, gift certificate to the local bookstore, or gift card to download an ebook.

from Carol Olmstead

Feng Shui Tip November:

In this month of Thanksgiving, you don't need more things to be thankful for, you just need more room for thankfulness.

Here are five things you can get rid of this month and be thankful for the extra space you've created for new things to flow into your life:

1. One unfinished project
2. One object that needs fixing but isn't worth the effort
3. One gift you never liked even though you love the giver
4. One souvenir that no longer has meaning
5. One item of clothing you've outgrown, physically or emotionally

Paranormal Investigations

Thanksgiving Tips

with Jane Philips

Holidays bring our family and friends together. And with families, it seems that, no matter how old we are, when we get back into the family fold, all of the old behaviors arise. It's as though we were each 10 years old and still living together. We quickly and easily move into the roles we played as children and young adults.

Here are a few tips to keep your energy and the energy of your family gatherings positive and high.

Epsom salt baths actually remove some of the dark energy that you may have collected over time. Put some Epsom salts in a warm bath and soak for 20 minutes. The salts pull the dark energy from your body and flush it into the water. Don't over-do it. Get out of the tub after 20 minutes so you don't reabsorb what was released.

Smudge the room(s) where you will be holding your event. Burn some white sage and let the smoke go into all of the corners of the room. White sage is known for removing dark energy. I recommend doing this a day or two in advance so the smell dissipates.

To raise the energy of a space after the dark energies have been removed, you might want to burn some sweet grass or Palo Santo wood. Again, let the smoke seep around the room.

Do a short prayer to Archangel Michael, Mother Mary, Jesus, or any other spiritual being that you honor. Ask them to bless and clear your space. Hold your focus on the room for a few minutes as the room is cleared.

If you know you have ghost-type spirits in your home, you may need more professional help. These energies can lend an uncertain and sometimes creepy vibe to your celebrations. Contact Jane Phillips for a free phone consultation to determine if a paranormal clearing session is warranted.

Affirmation of the Month

"Why am I full of gratitude & always giving gratitude for all I have?"

Creating Clarity

by Lainie Grimmer

Welcome to the beginning of a wonderful time of the year: The season of reflecting on and being grateful and thankful for what, and who, is in our lives. This is also a very busy time, and as I find myself swept along by the accelerated pace of my life and the season, it's easy for me to forget even to stop and take a breath, much less be thankful for what is in my life.

Research shows that people who practice gratitude consistently reap a host of benefits: Stronger immune systems, lower blood pressure, more joy and optimism...They have more compassion, and feel less lonely. The simple practice of being thankful increases your happiness quotient dramatically!

I'll be shifting my gratitude practice in the days to come and focusing on being thankful in small chunks of time throughout the day.

Try these simple and easy ways to identify and incorporate thankfulness into your upcoming busy days, too:

- Breathe in slowly, breathe out slowly. Marvel at how your body works without your even thinking about it.
- Are you sitting at a red light? Take that moment to be grateful for the technology that keeps you from harm.
- Take a bite of food, and REALLY taste it as you chew. Salty, sour, sweet, be thankful for the food nourishing your body with every bite.
- First thing in the morning, write down 5 things you're grateful for on a Post It and place it where you will see it throughout the day.
- Share your gratitude: Thank the store's clerk as you pay. Your thankfulness may just make her day!

Your Inner Rock Star

from Patty Walters

It's an inside job.

And I believe it's time for all of us to step into our inner greatness. Our imperfection is what has us ready to step onto the stage of our life.

It's time to SHIFT our mindset, get clear on what we want, and STEP UP into our desires.

I have a client who began coaching with me in April. Sue was not happy with her life, her job, nor her children. She knew she needed a new lease on life.

Now, things begin to happen as soon as she said Yes to a new life. Sue experienced a layoff – or as I've said, a graduation, from the job she didn't like or want. Begin the new life. She began networking like she had never done because as an HR Director, mother of 3, who had the time? She got back into an Improv class, which she has a love of being on stage. She re-ignited her heart with causes she believes in and didn't think she had the time to pursue.

Sue now has a different family dynamic and the daily dramas have turned into the 'what's next' of life. Sue is on her way. Did I say she now has a great man in her life who she shunned for a year? Yes, life is different. Yes, she has so many things she only wished for.... And it was an inside job.

Sue took a stand for herself and the experiences of her life.

Holidays are like child birth!

- Jan Stringer

Attracting the Perfect Holiday is like bringing a new child into the world. What I mean by that is that sometimes you plan it all very carefully and sometimes it is just an accident. Both options, planned or accidental have its merits, you could say. However this Thanksgiving I'm opting for a balance of the two. I'm making plans that keeps me from sitting at home alone, and one that leaves room for some spontaneous invitations.

This year has been filled with an abundance of new people in my life. I'm feeling so much gratitude for the bounty I've received from so many. It's the fulfillment of a conscious plan I made at the beginning of 2013 to meet as many people in my community as possible...I've been to numerous gatherings that were both social and business focused. So with the holidays zooming in fast...I'm thinking about how fun it would be to attract some new faces at the thanksgiving table this year. New conversations, new things to learn about, new energy in my thanksgiving seem to be a perfect match for my year of attracting this abundance of new people.

Gratitude for me is being open to accept the new people and not forget the old and Remembering my upbringing when my mom said: Make New Friends but Keep the Old...one is silver, the other gold. Happy Thanksgiving to you all!

The Journey Within

by Valarie McKenzie

“Gratitude unlocks the fullness of life. It turns what we have into enough, and more. It turns denial into acceptance, chaos to order, and confusion to clarity. It can turn a meal into a feast, a house into a home, a stranger into a friend.” -M. Beattie

“What would your life look like if the prevailing sentiment, the guiding principle, was gratitude? We all have a lot to be thankful for and yet we often go through life striving/pushing, criticizing, defending, opposing, looking beyond the blessing that are right in front of us, unfolding into the next moment.

Meditating on gratitude can migrate into meditations on love, kindness and acceptance for what is now in this moment we are sitting with.

“Nerve cells that fire together, wire together.” Therefore, if you repeatedly think and act in identical ways on a daily basis, your brain will become molded into a specific hardwired pattern that will support the same level of mind. It’s ironic. Most people routinely think the same thoughts, perform the same actions, and secretly expect something different to show up in their lives.

However, when we become mindful of our thoughts and the role they play in part in creating our life, then wouldn’t it make sense to keep your mind’s eye on Gratitude? Since emotions are magnetic then gratitude is the place I will continue to hang out in. How about you?

Real Estate Market Report For November

Forbes names Albuquerque a 'best' city for retirement by Damon Scott

Reporter- Albuquerque Business First

Forbes has named Albuquerque one of 25 cities across the U.S. that is a "best place to retire." The list was featured in its June 25 edition "25 Best Places To Retire In 2012," and on Forbes.com.

The ranking criteria included rating the cities on the economics of taxes, cost of living and current unemployment rates. Additional consideration was given to quality of life issues including weather conditions, crime rates, availability of medical care and whether a community environment lends itself to an "active lifestyle."

"This speaks to what all of us already know — Albuquerque is a great place to live. Primarily, because so many people care about making it special," Albuquerque Mayor Richard J. Berry said in a news release. "From the mountains to our business community we are without a doubt a vibrant city with a tremendous future ahead of us."

Forbes said Albuquerque particularly stood out in the categories of good weather, low taxes, below-average cost of living and opportunities for an active-lifestyle.

Albuquerque joins Atlanta, San Antonio and Salt Lake City on the list
